b) Yes.

c) The norms have been indicated in the enclosed note.

NORMS PRESCRIBED FOR DECIDING A PARTICULAR AREA AS WATERSHED AREA OR NOT.

Watershed area is a particular area whose drainage/basin is surrounded by a ridge line and whose run off water from all sides flows through and joins at a point. Depending upon the size it may be a catchment (drainage basin of a few lakh hectares) contributing to the flow of a primary river.

a sub catchment (more then 40,000 hectares) i.e., drainage basin of a secondary river.

a watershed (4000-40,000 hectares) i.e., drainage basin of a tertiary stream.

a mini watershed (400 to 4000 hectares) i.e., drainage basin of a streamlet.

a micro watershed (Less than 400 hectares) i.e., drainage basin of a head.

The watershed boundary/ridge line is marked with the help of toposheets (Scale 1"– 1 mile) and the ridge line so marked on the map is verified in the field for its correctness by reconnaissance survey by field staff. The list of villages and Khatedars who come within the watershed is prepared by verifying Revenue records and making enquiries with the local people and farmers.

The norms prescribed for selecting a watershed are.

1. Nearness of the area to be headquarter of the charge office.
2. Percentage of small and marginal farmers to be above 50% and contribution of their land holdings to the total holdings to be more than 25%.
3. Irrigated area to be less than 20%.

4. The rainfall to be below 1, 125 mm except in case of Western Ghat Development Scheme.

5. Arable area to be more than non-arable area.

6. Availability of dry farming technology with loca Universities and Development Departments.

From among the delineated watersheds in a taluk priority will be based on errodability, silt load, slope percentage and vegetal cover.
